Statements Have Been Signed by Quartet in Philadelphia, Admitting Robbing Mrs. Thomas Powell in Her Store—Claim "Leader" Waited in Car Nearby.

Four young men, forming part of an alleged "gang," claimed to have a young woman as a ring-leader, have, according to local authorities, signed statements that on the night of April 5th they held up Mrs. Thomas Powell, at her store in Cornwells Heights. A gun was said to have been used.

The quartet includes the following Philadelphians: Elmer McCord, 21, of 2128 E. Arizona avenue; William Minnick, 23, of 3113 Hurley street; Harry Kover, 19, of 2353 E. York street, and James Dorsey, 18, 139 W. Cumberland street.

These four, together with their alleged leader, Ethel Brown, alias Ethel Kay, 32, of 4915 N. Fourth street, Philadelphia, and several other young men, are being held in Philadelphia.

Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo, together with Corporal Ross Evans, and Private Mitchell, of Oxford Valley barracks, Pennsylvania Motor Police, visited the Paul and Ruan streets police station, Philadelphia, yesterday, and questioned those detained. From the four youths, they state they received signed statements in which the quartet admit participating in the hold-up of Mrs. Powell. They informed officers they received only $2.40, while at the time Mrs. Powell was of the opinion there was approximately $4 in the till.

The quartet of youthful bandits informed officials that Ethel Brown, alias Ethel Kay, was waiting in the car which was parked outside the Powell store.

The alleged gang, including 10 people, is believed to have participated in at least 35 hold-ups in the Philadelphia area. The ten are held without bail for court in connection with Philadelphia hold-ups. Detainers are to be lodged by Bucks County officers, so the portion of the gang can be charged locally later, in connection with the Powell case. The Brown woman denied to officers that she made the trip to Bucks County, while

Slashing Attack On Stavanger

London, Apr. 18.—Coincident with claims by a rescued Norwegian seaman that the German luxury liner Bremen was sunk off Norway with 15,000 Nazi troops aboard, the British air ministry today announced a series of slashing new attacks on Stavanger and other ports along the Norwegian coast.

Stavanger, already bombed by heavy naval guns and previously attacked by the air force, was again singled out for destruction in the belief Adolf Hitler planned to use it as a jumping off place for blistering raids on England.

Three British planes failed to return from the new onslaught, an air ministry communique said, but many German airplanes were said to have been hit on the ground, or in the air, and a German submarine hit.

Extensive damage was done to the Stavanger runways by exploding bombs, the announcement declared.

Not Over The Hurdles

Washington, April 17.

WHILE young Mr. Dewey pursues his conquering way across the country the impression grows that he is running away with the Republican nomination. Certainly that is the idea he himself manages to convey and it is the belief of his enthusiastic friends.

—O—

MOREOVER, it is easy to understand. Boldly he has gone out in the primary States and either beaten his opponents or scared them off. He has had organization money, energy and time. The combination has resulted in an impressive showing. Beyond question he is the leader in the race. Nevertheless, Mr. Dewey is a long way from the prize he seeks, and there are today a number of excellent reasons for not regarding him as safely over the dangerous hurdles.

—O—

FOR one thing, although he will have several hundred delegates when the convention meets, it is entirely clear he will not have the 500-odd which constitutes a majority. Nor will anyone else. Senator Taft will have a formidable bloc and a determined management, but probably he will be even shorter of the necessary control. The largest group will be either instructed or found using favorite sons as a roosting place from which to view the situation and make their deals. This means an open convention in which anything may happen.

—O—

IT, of course, is the Dewey hope that his demonstrated vote-getting ability will make him so clearly the strongest candidate that the leaders who hold the unrestricted delegates will flop to him after the

MAN ACCUSED OF SHOOTING WIFE HERE WAIVES HEARING

John E. Warner, 644 Bath St., Held in $3,000 Bail For Court

CHIEF JONES TESTIFIES

Hearing Held Here Today Was Very Brief and A Mere Formality

Brought here this morning from Doylestown for a hearing on the charges of assault and battery, aggravated assault and battery and attempt to maim and kill, John E. Warner, 23, 644 Bath street, at the advice of his attorney, John P. Betz, Jr., waived a hearing. Bail was set by Justice of Peace Edward Lynn, in the sum of $3,000. Warner was taken back to the Bucks County jail at Doylestown where he has been since November 12th, following the serious shooting of his wife.

The only evidence heard today was a brief statement of Chief of Police Linford J. Jones, who said that Warner had admitted firing three times at his wife.

Mrs. Warner, police said, was unable to appear at the hearing today and when the case is called at the May term of criminal court it may be necessary to transport her to Doylestown in an ambulance.

Mrs. Warner suffered a broken right arm as the result of a bullet wound and she also suffered two bullet wounds in her right side near the spine. All slugs were from a .38 caliber revolver.

Mrs. Warner's right arm is disabled as well as her left leg. It is stated that she is unable to walk.

The shooting occurred on Sunday afternoon, November 11th, in the living room of the residence of Fred Hall where the Warners made their home. It was stated at the time that the shooting was the result of a series of quarrels between the pair. Mr. Hall was in an adjoining room at the time of the shooting and, hearing the crack of the revolver, ran into the room and found Mrs. Warner wounded. Warner was still in the room and was disarmed by Hall, who later took him to

Compliments Bristol Post On Cadet Corps

Bracken Post of the American Legion, and likewise the American Legion Cadets are proud of the fact that the Cadet Drum and Bugle Corps' fame has spread to such an extent that groups in the extreme end of the state have decided to try to emulate the corps.

In the April issue of "Post Script," the publication of Rogers Israel Post, No. 11, American Legion, at Erie, under the heading of "Marking Time," reference is made to the Bristol corps and the honor and fame it has brought to Bristol and Bristol lads.

The question up for discussion is as to whether the Rogers Israel post shall have a 100 per cent Sons of the American Legion corps or an open junior drum corps. The editor takes issue with the committee which has decided upon a Sons of the Legion corps, and in part has this to say:

"Under Pennsylvania convention rules Sons' corps compete in line of parade only, while the spectacular field contests are reserved for Class 'D' Cadet corps, open to all boys—and girls—not exceeding 21 years of age.

"A SOTAL corps is permitted to enter in this class in preference to the Class 'E' Sons' corps if it so desires, provided it lives up to age limits. However, to date only one such, Taylor, has seen fit to do so and though a flashy outfit it has never worried the leaders to any great extent.

"By organizing an open junior corps, including the Sons, rather than a 100% closed unit, we would be promoting a youth activity which would unquestionably attract widespread local interest and support as a civic movement.

"As a shining example, the colorful Bristol Cadets, which under well-managed Post sponsorship has given more than 700 youngsters a fine training in discipline and sportsmanship without a single case or arraignment for juvenile delinquency, are regarded as that city's best investment in citizenship.

"We cannot help but feel too, that the boys of the same age as our Sons are going to resent an organization whose eligibility requirements were established one generation before they could do anything about it."

WASTING LEAVES

It may have been the publicity given the recent meeting of the Chemurgic Society that prompts a Philadelphia newspaper writer to deplore the waste of burning leaves. He hints that chemists or other scientists ought to find a way to make better use of the tremendous leaf tonnage produced by shade trees and forests.

No doubt he has been properly coached, rebuked and instructed by his "To the Editor" letters from scientific gardeners, florists, foresters and hobby farmers. They have told him on excellent authority that "the accumulation of leaves as leaf-mold in forests is the explanation of the sustained soil fertility there even though no fertilizer is ever supplied." That quotation is from one of the best gardening authorities in the country. Also they warned him that he never should burn leaves, but should add them to a compost heap to be used for his garden.

But after making all these concessions to those who have use for leaves, it is still possible to back the Philadelphia writer in acknowledging that to millions of homeowners leaves are just a nuisance, and the quicker chemists find ways of making them into wall covering, ladies' stockings, automobile body finish or tires, the better said homeowners will be pleased.

The factor that dims such hopes for the near future is the present abundance. While man is wasting such a lot of stuff that could be used easily if he were a little hard pressed, he is not likely to go to a lot of trouble about leaves which can be got out of the way by scratching a match.

NO MORE "EASY" MONEY

Americans have not been pestered lately by peddlers of those alluring lottery tickets which cost $2.50 each and promised riches beyond the dreams of avarice—the entries in the famous Irish Sweepstakes.

Many bought had few were chosen. It is these few one reads about in the last few years, the rare ones who were yanked out of obscurity, had their pictures in the paper, received checks in boxcar figures and went on, presumably, from overalls to toppers, white ties and tails. Little was said of the millions of contributors who received nothing for their money but the excitement of gazing for a moment on a mirage of gold. It was the latter who made the whole thing possible.

From Dublin comes a dispatch that the Irish Hospital Trust, which for ten years conducted the sweepstakes and distributed about $166,000,000 in "prizes" (no figures are available for the total taken in, and no pun is intended) is closing its books and going out of business because of the war. Of course, that doesn't necessarily mean that the greater hazard has overcome the lesser, but that mines and submarines and blockades have disturbed the smooth running of another international money scheme.

Now, isn't that just too bad? But once again, c'est la guerre.

Dr. Paul Popenoe of the Institute of Human Relations says more men propose marriage in automobile than anywhere else. Would that account for the number of cars that try to nose telephone poles out of the way and bust through bridge railings?

SYNOPSIS

Gabrielle Snow, lovely 18-year-old daughter of wealthy Samuel Snow, an oil magnate, falls in love with Peter Parsons, a handsome young soda clerk. Peter, however, is a talented pianist, a promising vocalist, and aspires to become a composer. Gabrielle's parents object to the match because Peter has no social background. So— one night, while out riding with Gabrielle's friend, Dorothy Mackey, and the latter's fiance, Tony, Gaby and Peter decide to get married immediately. It is 3 A. M., and they have to wait until the license bureau opens. Tony prevails upon Dotty to make it a double wedding. After the ceremony, Gabrielle recalls that her uncle's will stipulated that if she married before she was 21, she would not get her inheritance until she became 35. "I'm glad of it," Peter announces. "I'd never have married you if I'd known you would have so much money. Now you'll have to be dependent on me!" They return home to face the music. When Gabrielle introduces Peter as her husband, her mother nods coolly, then excuses herself and goes upstairs. Mr. Snow threatens to have the marriage annulled.

CHAPTER EIGHT

"I'll stick with him anyway!" stormed Gabrielle, stamping her feet and glaring at her father. "You'd do nothing of the kind," he said harshly, but there was a slight indecision in his tone. "I will to!" cried Gabrielle, almost hysterically. "I'll have a baby—that's what I'll do!"

All at once, she smiled at her, tenderly, while saying, "All right, Gaby," he murmured. "I believe you, dear."

"Peter," he said, and turned steadily to the boy, "take her, and may God bless you!"

Peter took an involuntary step forward saying: "You don't mind after all, sir? You don't hate me then?"

"I certainly don't hate you, Peter," said Gabrielle's father. "I do pity you though. We've spoiled her until I'm afraid she's past redemption. Peter, but—you asked for it, so here she is."

"Thank you, sir."

"I hope you'll both be very happy, and I'm sure you will be part of the time," he ended enigmatically.

He held out his hand to the younger man. Peter took it quickly. With a deep understanding they gazed into each other's eyes, until Gabrielle broke in with:

"Now if Mother would only be sensible!"

"Your mother is mighty hurt over your utter disregard for her wishes, Gaby. Also about the inheritance from your Uncle Gabe. Has she told you about that, Peter?"

His face spread into a wide grin, his blue eyes shining with merriment, Peter replied with amusement, "Not until after I'd married her, sir. I'm glad she won't have it. I want her dependent on me!"

"That's highly commendable of you, Peter," said Sam Snow, a warm smile lighting up his countenance.

"Gaby, you'd better run up and see your mother," he continued seriously. "Helen will probably be sick over this."

A look of contrition came over Gabrielle's face, and she turned to go. She smiled at Peter, came back, kissed him lightly on the mouth. Then, seeing her father's expression, she kissed him, too.

But Helen didn't become ill over Gabrielle's sudden marriage, nor did she remain unfriendly toward Peter. Instead, she remembered her own romance with Gabrielle's father, and entered into the business of finding a suitable apartment for them with much enthusiasm.

By four o'clock that afternoon, she and Gabrielle had found several which seemed all right as to price, neighborhood and furnishings. Gabrielle had promised Peter she'd not rent one until he had seen it too.

She and her mother came back to the Snow residence shortly after the last available apartment had been seen, and found Peter and Sam smoking on the front veranda with all the seeming enjoyment of old friends.

Helen called to Violet to bring iced drinks to the veranda, then settled herself in the glider, sighing as she did so.

"It's some job, choosing an apartment," she said quietly. "I think you'd better take the last one, Gabrielle, the one with the bedroom and the outside kitchenette."

"It was the nicest," agreed Gabrielle, her eyes shining. "It had a bedroom, large living room, kitchenette, bath and two large clothes closets, Peter."

Peter smiled adoringly at her: "How much, Gaby?"

"That's it," said Gabrielle, grinning. "It was $65, but the utilities were paid, and the location is lovely."

"Where? That's out," said Peter, grinning.

"The others were almost as bad—any of them you'd have," contributed Helen matter-of-factly. "Only one at $25, bills paid by the renter and—it was awful!"

Peter looked seriously at Gabrielle: "But that's all we can possibly pay, Gaby. You know that."

"I'll tell you," intervened Helen brightly. "Sam and I will pay your first year's rent and then you can afford to take the nicer apartment. Won't we, Sam?"

Pulling gently on his pipe, Sam regarded Peter quizzically.

"I'm sorry," began Peter determinedly. "But I'd prefer to pay my own bills if you don't mind. It's awfully nice of you."

He turned to Gabrielle and found her looking at him in amusement.

"You'd rather we got along on what I make, wouldn't you, Gaby?" he asked, his blue eyes pleading for her approval.

"If you'd only go look at them, Peter," began Gabrielle.

"All right, I will!" announced Peter, getting up. "Let's go!"

A doubtful expression on Gabrielle's face changed into one of acquiescence at his urgent look. Turning to her parents, she asked: "May we take the car?"

"Help yourselves," said her father quietly.

"I don't know where to take you first," said Gabrielle, as they drove down the avenue. "Shall I begin at the bottom, or the top?"

"Begin with one we can afford," answered Peter quickly. "The $25 one sounds more in line."

Gabrielle gave him an oblique look, and drove through the town, then over to the far side of the railroad tracks.

"It's over here," she offered. "They saw a dirty little child playing with a broken-down wagon in front of the building when Gabrielle brought the sedan to a standstill."

"Hi, son!" said Peter, after Gabrielle had hurried by him.

She turned back and beheld beneath the sealed exterior of the small tot a cherub face topped by hair very much like her own.

"I ought to get a dollar a day, but seeing as you have no children—well, say $6 a week!"

"We'll consider it. We haven't looked around yet," said Peter. "Shall we go, Gaby?"

"Oh, yes," she answered fervently.

Down in the car once more she drove away with abandonment.

"Could be made pretty comfy, don't you think?" asked Peter.

"Oh, Peter! The place is horrid!" They viewed the other three which Gabrielle had been able to locate. With the oil boom it wasn't easy to find lodgings in the small community. The others started at $35 and from there they soared astoundingly.

"Finally they had seen them all. 'I guess we'd better take the first one we saw,' said Peter."

"But, Peter—the $35 one—"

"No," said Peter adamantly. "We must live on what I make, Gaby. You agreed to that, sweetheart."

There was a note of pleading in his tone and Gabrielle, glancing away from the road for a moment, looked into his blue eyes and succumbed.

They moved in that night, much against Helen Snow's wishes. She urged Peter to stay at their home, for a while at least, but Peter was not to be budged from his determination to take care of Gabrielle himself.

"I have to be at work at six in the morning, Mrs. Snow," he explained. "I'd like to get settled tonight, if you don't mind."

"Don't worry about it, Mother," cried Gabrielle. "We'll fix it up so you'd never know it. With some of my pictures and things..."

"Sure," said Peter, in relief, "we'll fix it up."

The lines were furnished, such as they were, and Gabrielle with Peter's help put the thin, gray looking sheets on the lumpy, in-a-door bed shortly before 10 o'clock that night. They laughed over a pale blue patch, obviously from someone's shirt, near the bottom of the sheet.

One of their windows faced the south and the soft June breeze blew the narrow scrim curtain gently, in and out. A boudoir lamp, which Gabrielle had brought from her daffodil yellow room, gave forth a soft golden gleam, ameliorating the contiguity and fadness of the angular old furnishings.

Later, when their slim young bodies were stretched out on the bed, a timid new moon peeked in under the shade, and Gabrielle signed ecstatically as Peter encircled her with his arms.

A shrill ring brought Gabrielle to an upright position promptly at five o'clock. The offending disturbance proved to be the bright green alarm clock which Peter had placed on a stand near the bed. Reaching out, she shut it off, glaring at it angrily. It was the first time in her life she had been rudely awakened.

Yawning prodigiously, she turned sleepily back to the bed. Her eyes softened as she took in the sleeping form of Peter. He lay on his side facing her; his black lashes were tangled like a small boy's, and his full lips were red with health.

He had stirred slightly when the alarm went off, but that was all. He had told her the night before that he always left the alarm on repeat, because that was the only way he'd ever notice it. She leaned over and kissed the relaxed mouth tenderly.

Dream laden eyes opened and regarded her bluely.

"Good morning, dear husband," she said, liking the sound of the word on her lips.

"Then it wasn't a dream!" he murmured, drawing her to him.

Peter sounded as supremely happy as she felt.

The Great Game of Politics

first ballot. Chief obstacles in the way of that program are the extreme distaste for Mr. Dewey personally among politicians in his own party; the open hostility of his national committee, Mr. Simpson and the unfriendliness of various potent party figures whose support in the campaign is essential. Their attitude is due partly to dislike of the Dewey personality and partly to distrust of his views.

FOR example, there is the belief, justified by his speeches, that although he started out more or less in accord with the Roosevelt policy and is by no means an isolationist at heart, he has been swung over to the isolation point of view by certain advisers who have convinced him that that is the way to win. From the way he is now talking and the character of some of his journalistic support, they are convinced that if he should be nominated the Republican party would be forced into an extreme isolation position as well as open antagonism to the Hall reciprocal-trade treaties.

THIS prospect is deeply disturbing to many thoughtful men in his party who, while strongly anti-New Deal and prepared to regard almost anything as better than a continuation of the Roosevelt regime, none the less feel that such an attitude is not only unenlightened but against the national interests. If at the convention the Dewey position continues to be extreme in these respects, the opposition to him will intensify and solidify. Certainly a very determined fight will be made to prevent his selection.

THE uninstructed delegates may be swung back of Senator Taft, whose stand on foreign affairs has been more broad-minded—and certainly more consistent. Or they may be used to bring about a deadlock from which could emerge a compromise candidate. In this connection it is interesting to note the extraordinary status of Mr. Wendell Willkie. With no delegates, no campaign and no delusions as to his chances, Mr. Willkie's name is more often heard when alternatives are suggested than any other. The truth is that an increasing number of people in and out of the party believe that Mr. Willkie is a better man, a bigger man, and would make a better candidate and a better President.

ATTRACTIVE AND INEXPENSIVE

EVERYONE likes the long, columned front porch of the Southern Colonial type home, which is familiarly referred to as "like Mount Vernon." Many people who would build a house of this type hesitate because of the feeling that such a home is excessively costly.

This need not be true. This house is a six-room home of average size, so designed that the columns and the front porch look well, despite the fact that the house is less than 40 feet long.

Because the roof of the main house covers the porch, because the house is built of wood, because the garage is in the basement, and because the house is a perfect rectangle its construction cost is quite reasonable. Very beautifully finished, this house should not exceed $10,000.

"How Can I Cut Food Costs?"

Katharine Fisher

Director, Good Housekeeping Institute

Answers Some of Your Questions:

"Can you suggest a few ways in which I may safely cut corners in my meat bill?"

It's poor economy to buy low-grade meats. Select meats that bear the packer's or government's quality stamp. For your savory pot roasts, stews, meat pies, chopped-meat dishes, meat loafs, etc., choose such thrifty cuts as chuck, neck, flank, or rump of beef, neck or breast of veal, and shoulder or neck of lamb. Always ask for the meat trimmings. Simmered with vegetables and well seasoned, they make luscious, hearty soups. Buy beef or lamb's liver—it's cheaper and just as healthful as calves'. Frequently serve fish "buis," such as cod, haddock, quick-frozen perch, codfish cakes, canned salmon, or grated tuna. Don't forget cheese and egg dishes: fondue, cheese salads, omelets, etc.

"What about milk? Although I have to watch the pennies, I don't want to skimp on foods my family should have to keep fit."

There's a wise mother! Many of us, trying to be thrifty, fail to get into our meals enough calcium—an important health builder. Yet we can get calcium economically by using milk and cheese generously. Be sure each child gets 1 qt. of milk daily to drink, in or on cereals, or in cooked foods. Adults need 1 pt. each. (Cheese may supply part of this.) Use evaporated or dried milk for some of your cooking—you get the same food value for less money. Often serve thrifty milk soups of beans, corn, potatoes, peas, fish. Serve vegetables in cheese sauce; scalloped dishes of vegetables, fish, cheese, or meat; cheese in salads and salad dressings; milk desserts of rice or bread pudding, custards, etc.

"What are some of the shopping tips that will keep precious pennies from vanishing when I market?"

You'll save if you keep a reminder ring in the kitchen for jotting down staples as soon as they're used up. You'll save if you make up your market list with your menus before you. Decide just how much of each item you will need, by referring to your recipes. You'll save if you buy staples in quantities as large as your storage space and your family's eating habits permit. Cocoa, baking powder, jams, salad dressings, which you can save by buying in large-size cans or jars. Soap, paper towels, etc., bought in quantity, are sometimes lower, too. Remember that pennies saved soon add up to dollars.

"What can I do about leftovers? They are forever a problem."

Avoid unnecessary leftovers by knowing how much to buy for your family. When you do have them, chill them, covered, and deliberately work them into the next day's menus, or the next. If it's leftover lamb, try croquettes, stew, goulash, lamb curry, etc. If it's beef, the right answers are: hash, croquettes, stuffed peppers, etc. If it's a vegetable, combine it with the one for tomorrow's dinner; make it into a cream soup; use it in salads; add it to your salad dressing; serve it creamed, etc. If it's a fruit, mold it in gelatin for dessert or salad. Or serve it over cake. If it's egg yolks, hard-cook them in boiling water, then mince and use in sauces, salads, salad dressings, sandwich fillings, etc.

"How can I keep my food allowance in bounds and still give the family the daily vitamin C quota?"

When oranges, grapefruit, or tangerines are inexpensive, serve them daily, as juice, in salads, fruit cups, fruit drinks, as desserts, etc. Don't squeeze or peel them in advance; they lose vitamin C. Use lemons freely in salad dressings, in desserts, to step-up spinach, etc. Use lemons freely in fresh or canned tomatoes or tomato juice in your daily meals. Add them to your soups or stews. Scalloped tomatoes with other cheap vegetables, such as spinach or cabbage. Serve them with linus, rice, macaroni, or salmon; jellied as salad, etc. Serve shredded raw green cabbage frequently, alone or with raw carrots, other vegetables, or fruits in salads. Or serve cabbage cooked quickly (8 to 10 min.); the longer the cooking the more vitamin C you lose. Serve other vegetables, as well as bananas, apples, and canned and dried fruits often.

"I'm a novice housekeeper. Please tell me how to buy thrifty and healthful vegetables."

Greens, green cabbage, salad greens, carrots, yellow turnips, winter squash, potatoes, string beans, peas, and tomatoes are wise purchases. Watch local market prices. Market vegetables (in season) are usually better and cheaper. Buy them yourself! Then you can check on freshness, quality, and bargains. Keep perishable vegetables in your refrigerator to conserve vitamin C. Cook vegetables in their skins, or pare thinly, steam or boil them, covered, in 1 in. of boiling water. Don't pour food value down the sink. Use canned and quick-frozen vegetables whenever you can. They're richer in minerals and vitamins than many market vegetables. In heating canned vegetables such as peas, boil the liquid down half, add the peas, and heat. You save food value.

RECIPES: Those Which Interest Women

Economy Meats For Party Fare

Many homemakers who are able to serve good meals to their families without stretching their budget find that entertaining is a costly item. They enjoy having their friends about them, but the food for luncheons and dinners makes them hesitate to give parties as often as they would like.

If you are one of those who are puzzled by this problem, perhaps you will find help in the suggestion of Inez S. Wilson, home economist, that you use the same good sense and thrifty ideas in planning your party menus as you do for your family meals. There are economy cuts of meat which can be served very temptingly for your main course, and the menu which accompanies them also can be planned for thrift without any sacrifice of daintiness and taste appeal.

Lamb "Breast-Chops"

For instance, what could be more tempting as a main dish for a luncheon party than lamb "breast-chops"? This new kind of lamb chops is cut from the breast of lamb. The breast bone is removed and a pocket is cut along the rib bones from the larger end. This is packed firmly with ground lamb. The meat is chilled for at least a half hour, then sliced between the ribs to form slices resembling chops. These can be broiled like lamb chops or they can be braised, that is, browned on both sides in hot lard, then, with a little moisture added, covered and simmered until done.

These "breast chops" will fit into any of your favorite party menus. Another tasty and unusual main dish to serve to guests consists of ham stacks. These are not hard to prepare and they are sure to win you compliments on your skill as a cook. Here are directions for a sufficient quantity for serving eight persons.

Ham Stacks

- 8 slices pineapple
- 2 cups mashed sweet potatoes
- 2 tablespoons brown sugar
- 2 tablespoons melted butter
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- 1 pound ground smoked ham
- 1 egg
- 16 slices bacon
- Salt

Split each pineapple round into half to make two thin slices. Season the sweet potatoes with brown sugar, butter, salt and pepper. Shape into flat patties to fit the pineapple rounds. Mix the ground ham with egg and shape into patties one-quarter inch thick and the same size as the sweet potato patties. Form each stack by placing a ham patty on a half slice of pineapple. Add a sweet potato patty and top with another half slice of pineapple. Arrange two slices of bacon crosswise over each stack. Place in a shallow baking pan and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for one hour.

COFFEE, AFTER LONG IMPROVEMENT, IS A CHOICE BEVERAGE

By Miss Edna Stephany
(Home Economics Representative)
Inside the Coffee Pot

Coffee, according to legend, was first used as a beverage in 1258.

Not until 1625 did it become known that sugar has its merits in a cup of coffee. Then in 1660, the Dutch Ambassador to China ingeniously thought of adding milk to his sweetened coffee.

An American scientist, Count Rumford (Benjamin Thompson), invented the percolator in 1806.

For Americans, perhaps the most important other date in coffee history is 1906, the year the Federal Food and Drugs Act was passed.

The decisive role the Food and Drugs Administration played is apparent in its rulings. An early ruling for example kept out of the United States coffee from Europe and other places which had been coated with lead chromate and similar poisonous chemicals to improve its appearance.

It also became illegal to import into the United States blackjack coffee, that is, coffee of a very low grade with a large proportion of decomposed beans.

Any practice, in fact, which tended to make coffee appear to be better than it was, or which concealed inferiority, was put on a legal unfair list.

Finally, misrepresentation of the variety of coffee offered for sale was also forbidden.

Two billion pounds of coffee each year are tablespooned into America's coffee pot—so aromatic in the morning. More than half these 2 billion pounds of coffee are hauled down the sides of the great Brazilian plateau to the ports for shipment to American cities. From April to August, men and women slowly work their way from coffee shrub to coffee shrub, gathering the ripe red coffee cherries in sacks or baskets or pails. The coffee cherries grow in clusters around the base of the stems of bright green, oval leaves on shrubs which range from man-height to three times the height of a man. Like other tropical trees the coffee shrub bears flowers, green fruit and ripe fruit all at the same time. During picking season only a few of the honeysuckle-like white flowers remain; enough, however, to fill the dry plateau air with a faint jasmine scent.

After the coffee is gathered, the red skin of the coffee cherry is removed along with a fruity pulp and a silvery parchment to disclose two green coffee beans. These beans, polished, sorted by sizes, and sacked, are the coffee of commerce.

In the United States the coffee is poured out of its sacks into other sorting machines where further sizing takes place, and then by suction it is carried along to a milling machine which cleans it. Some time later different varieties of coffee are blended together by dealers' formulas, and then the coffee is roasted in perforated cylinders which rotate before a furnace giving off a steady heat.

Coffee isn't bought for its food value. Before the ancient Arabians discovered that a stimulating flavorful drink could be made out of it they ground it up, rolled grease into it, and ate it.

That way it was a food. Today, however, people look to fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, and dairy products for food and know that coffee brew has no food value. Those who use cream and sugar in their coffee, of course, have added a little food value, mainly calories. But all that the coffee drinker asks of coffee is that it be stimulating, fragrant, and flavorful.

Roughly these virtues in a cup of coffee depend upon the variety of the coffee, the way it is roasted, its freshness, and the way it is made.

Four Young Men in 'Gang' Admit Holding-Up Cornwells Woman

the young men informed that she was the ring-leader, and accompanied them.

Dorsey, it is stated, was to have been wed a few days ago to the daughter of a Philadelphia policeman.

Dorsey evaded a police trap last Saturday, when he failed to show up for his planned marriage in Croydon, with Dorothy Ehresmann, 19, of Lipincott street, Philadelphia, daughter of a Philadelphia policeman. The girl did not appear either, her mother having warned here there might be trouble, it is said. Detectives nabbed Dorsey on Tuesday, the youth being disguised with dark glasses as he entered a rooming house in Philadelphia.

Another woman, Dorothy Miller, 35, of E. Sergeant street, Philadelphia, has also been arrested with the gang against her is conspiracy, aggravated assault and highway robbery. The police claim the Miller and Brown women scouted taprooms for drunken men, who later were robbed.

When the four entered the Powell store on the night of April 5th, Mrs. Powell was alone in the establishment, her husband listening to the radio in the adjoining house. One of the four youths asked for a chocolate bar, and it was when Mrs. Powell handed the candy to him, that she was faced with a gun with instructions that this was a hold-up. Forced to tell where the money was, she had to stand by and watch the till being looted. The four were not masked.

SUNDAY DINNER Suggestions

THE scarcity of vegetables during the past few weeks after the freezing of expected Florida crops, has been alleviated by crops from other states, and by the first of the replanted crops from Florida. Tomatoes from that state have already arrived, and from other states have come new cabbage, new potatoes, green-beans and asparagus to take care of those who demand fresh vegetables. Beef, veal, and both fresh and smoked pork prices are attractive, but lamb chops and leg of lamb remain high. All poultry and turkey are plentiful and inexpensive, and are valuable additions to the menus of families who like to have fowl on the Sunday dinner table, says Cora Anthony of the A&P Kitchen. The run of shad in the Hudson has not materialized, but the first of the fresh mackerel is expected in two weeks.

Here are three dinners at different price levels.

Low Cost Dinner

Moderate Cost Dinner

Very Special Dinner

the streets of Bristol. As Chief Jones stated a few days ago, "It is better to stop reckless driving before a serious accident occurs than it is after perhaps a life has been lost."

Tuesday night, police were stationed along Pond street, and stopped numerous drivers for speed violation.

Get Huge Sum from Mail Bags

Paterson, N. J., Apr. 18.—Three bandits armed with machine guns escaped with several thousand dollars in cash today after overpowering a United States mail driver and a guard at a suburban station of the Erie Railroad.

So carefully did the bandits rifle through the mail sacks that fully 10 minutes elapsed from the time of their arrival until their departure in a high-powered car.

Postal inspectors and Federal agents immediately were rushed to the scene from Paterson, and took up the pursuit.

Lose Race With Death

Philadelphia, Apr. 18.—Roaring through the night with two-year-old Marlin Sheely, Jr., of Carlisle, two State policemen early today lost a race with death, as the child died near this city where an operation might have saved his life.

State police were called to Carlisle Hospital when physicians decided that only bronchoscopic experts at Temple University Hospital could remove a piece of peanut from the boy's lung. They stopped only at Lancaster to renew the oxygen supply. A nurse and the child's mother held the boy in the rear seat.

The race was lost at Paoli, where little Marlin died. Sadly the troopers turned their car home again.

Germans Claim Condition Unchanged

Berlin, Apr. 18.—Failure of a weak British attempt to land in the region of the northern Norwegian port of Narvik was announced by the German high command today, as officials insisted the situation there remains unchanged.

German authorities said the British expeditionary force in Norway continues to spread to the north from its landing base at Harstad base.

But at noon today, they said, the German commander at Narvik informed Berlin there was no change in the situation, and reported that German forces occupied the Narvik iron ore railway as far east as the Swedish frontier.

German reconnoitering expeditions, furthermore, failed to establish the presence of enemy forces anywhere among the islands stretching south from Narvik towards Trondheim, it was claimed.

In Berlin, German authorities stated that the repulse of the attempted British landings was regarded as the "first failure" of the British in testing the strength of the German defenses at Narvik.

They added that more serious British landing attempts are expected.

Man Accused of Shooting Wife Here Waives Hearing

police headquarters. Mrs. Warner was removed to the Wagner hospital in the ambulance of the Bucks County Rescue Squad and later removed to a Philadelphia hospital from which she returned about six weeks ago.

Warner was closely questioned after the shooting by both Chief of Police Linford J. Jones and Bucks County Detective Anthony Ruoso. At that time police, in their questioning of Warner, said that he made a full confession of the shooting. The couple had many arguments. Warner told the authorities that two weeks previous to the shooting he and his wife went for an automobile ride and argued while on the Bridgetown road, near Langhorne. At that time, Warner said, according to the police, that he hit his wife over the head with a wrench. He is also said to have stated that he had a shot-gun in the car on that occasion, but did not use it, despite the fact that he is alleged to have threatened his wife on numerous occasions. Mrs. Warner required medical attention as a result of the beating, but brought no action against her husband.

After the argument, Warner went South, going to Virginia, where he visited a friend. "I wanted to get my nerves settled," he is reported to have said. Upon his return home November 9th, the arguments were resumed and Warner, the officers say, told them that he concealed a revolver which he had borrowed in Virginia, beneath his pillow.

The police say that Warner told them that he and his wife argued again. He told the police that Sunday, November 11th, at about one o'clock, he went to his room which adjoined the room of his wife and loaded the revolver. He stuck it in his pocket and returned to the room where his wife was sitting.

"I guess I lost my head," he is reported to have replied.
Warner is a hosiery knitter at the Blue Moon mill in Croydon. He formerly lived in Eddington.

Petunia of Ideal Shape
Wins All-America Medal

Plant breeders working with bedding plants have in mind an ideal which might be described as follows: A dwarf, compact plant forming as nearly as possible a hemisphere of color. They would like the flowers to be so numerous that leaves are never—or hardly ever—seen; and the plant should bloom without check until frost kills it.

This ideal has so far not been realized, and it may be better so. A plant that "stayed out" so completely as that would hardly seem alive. Still, it must be admitted that the breeders have something, when they seek a plant that will grow compactly, and produce a mass of bloom. So when judges in the All-America trials for 1940 saw the new petunia Cream Star, they recognized its merit and awarded it a silver medal.

This petunia is the nearest approach to the ideal plant that has yet been produced in petunias. It grows in a compact mound and its flowers are so freely produced that it always registers as a color mass. The color is faintly cream, though giving the effect of white in the garden. When it is recalled that yellow is the one color so far missing from petunias, except as a faint tinge, it will be realized that this variety is an important one from a breeding standpoint. If its excellent growth habit can be transmitted to offspring, and the faint tinge of yellow strengthened, then great progress may be made in petunia breeding.

In the meantime Cream Star is a grade one product, and will be found the best white petunia to date, excellent for window boxes, tubs and borders.

Announces Good
News For Blondes

To all girls who are waiting about the upkeep of being a blonde . . . and you who have acquired that "bleached blonde" look instead of a shining golden crown . . . here is news to cheer the heart, from Ida's Beauty Salon.

The glamorous sheen of satiny platinum hair is irresistible; so are red-gold curls, windblown or formally coiffed. But not when the hair is straw-like and dull, or when the color is obviously synthetic.

So we introduce you to an oil bleach in lovely color-tones, which conditions the hair as it bleaches and gives you the shade you want, all in one application . . . and you can buy a home treatment package for only 75 cents!

The oil bleach, which leaves the hair soft and lustrous and with none of the artificial look, comes in three basic shades . . . gold, drab and red. The first is for those who want a golden blonde result; the second for platinum; the third for the red-blond hue that is so stunning with creamy skin and hazel eyes.

The salon treatment cost is not exorbitant, and it will be an excellent investment. You can buy the home treatment package there and get advice on the way to get the best results.

"The Story of Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet," a film constructed along the same lines as "The Story of Louis Pasteur," comes to the Grand Theatre tomorrow as the theatre film.

It so happens that Ehrlich was a friend and disciple of Pasteur, and carried on some of the work that the French scientist started. Like Pasteur, Dr. Ehrlich sought constantly to establish an ever closer relationship between medicine and chemistry.

Edward G. Robinson has his greatest role as Dr. Ehrlich and is said to give a performance equal to those which Paul Muni gave in "The Story of Louis Pasteur" and in "Emile Zola."

JENKINTOWN EASILY DEFEATS TRACKMEN OF BENSALAM TEAM

Owl Tracksters Lose By Big Score, Being Completely Outpointed

McKEON IS THE STAR

Cops All Three Events He Enters and Scores 15 Points For Jenkintown

JENKINTOWN, Apr. 18.—With Walt McKeon overshadowing all other performers, the Jenkintown Drakes track team easily defeated the Bensalem Owl tracksters in a dual meet here yesterday afternoon, 54½ to 25½.

McKeon won all three events he entered to score 15 of his team's total number of points. He topped first place in both the 100 and 220 dashes in the fast times of 10 and 24.2 seconds respectively. itely indicated as it is not planned to close the sale of bonds until May 1st.

It was decided at this meeting to employ an assistant Scout Executive around the middle of May and conduct the Fall county-wide solicitation for funds without employing a professional campaign manager.

Plans for again sending a troop to the New York World's Fair this summer were abandoned as it was found that the majority of troops were concentrating on sending their boys to the new camp. A name for the new camp has not as yet been selected although a contest is in progress among the troops for a suitable Indian name. The prize will be a free week in camp.

All equipment and materials will be removed from the old "Buccoo" in New Jersey this week-end and transferred to the new site. A dozen trucks donated by friends and over 50 leaders and scouts will participate in this work.

for all people exposed to the disease to receive the vaccine inoculations. This is the opinion, not of Dr. Elman alone but one given by the outstanding United States Army medical officer in the Philadelphia area.

"I am thoroughly convinced that Dr. Elman is correct," declared Dr. John Ward, physician in charge of the typhoid cases from the beginning. One well has been found with contaminated water but that definite analysis reports had not as yet been received as to typhoid. "In one instance a district medical director pronounced the inoculation theory as phooey, but the expert opinion from the Army officer, and the pathological laboratory yesterday, seems to carry more weight. It is the only way to check up permanently."

Plumsteadville residents are co-operating with the health authorities and are boiling all water for a half hour. This is extremely important.

Wild rumors led the Doylestown Board of Health to make an announcement that there are no cases of typhoid fever in Doylestown and have not been for years. The fact that 90 per cent of the Plumsteadville milk (now pasteurized) is sold in Doylestown, leads health authorities to the opinion that the epidemic was not caused by the milk supply.

Some definite and fast action is anticipated as a result of local pressure being brought to bear on the State Health Department to speed up the investigation and make some report on samples of water and milk taken last Friday and Saturday.

One death has occurred.

member of the faculty, Corporal Evans told of the phases of work carried out by the motor police, mentioned laws governing speeding, etc., recounted some interesting cases, and after the session showed several scrap-books which present pictures of the injured people, wrecked cars, damage to property, and accounts of police work.

He stated that one of the problems of the motor police is that of protection of the child en route to and from school. He explained how the school buses are checked thoroughly prior to opening of the school term, and the continual check kept upon the vehicles and drivers likewise. "We have some very good drivers in this locality. They have been very careful."

The method of check on speeders was told, and spots where numerous accidents occur in this territory considered. He informed that in 1938 the motor police of Bucks county investigated 375 accidents, in which 19 fatalities were included; and in 1939 investigated 340 accidents, the fatalities being 16 for that year. "The number of injured and amount of property damage totalled about the same for the two years. And thus far this year we are ahead of the two preceding years, but we have had some very bad weather, with plenty of ice since the first of 1940." Corporal Evans warned against application of brakes too quickly when highways are icy. "It is one of the worst things a driver can do. It is much better to take the foot off the accelerator."

He told of the countless and unusual reasons given by drivers following accidents, then explained how recommendations are made to the State Department for suspension of licenses, revocations and for those believed eligible for the "black list," those in the latter group never being able to again secure a license.

"We have been enforcing the speed laws stringently," the officer of the law informed, as he continued to deal with matters pertaining to fines, suspensions, and possible penalties. He gave as his opinion that a "heavy foot" causes most of the accidents.

Mentioning that since the consolidation of the state police and the highway patrol groups, the Pennsylvania Motor Police cover criminal as well as highway investigations, he stated the barracks are open 24 hours a day. "We want you to call us at any hour of the day or night if you need our help, and we will be glad to try to aid."

The business preceded the address, Mrs. Joseph Mucklow presiding. Minutes were read by Miss Margaret Perry; and the account of the treasury condition presented by Samuel Brehaut. The P. T. A. creed was read by Mr. Gledhill.

A splendid account of the Spring Assembly of the Bucks County P. T. A. was given by the president, Mrs. Mucklow, the members thoroughly enjoying the report.

A nominating committee to report at the May session, includes Messrs. Richard Gledhill, Lewis Goll and Russell Haines. Named as auditors are Mrs. Robert Brien, Sr., and Miss Dorothy Thuss. A motion was passed for the association to purchase eye-glasses for two students. The attendance banner was won by grades seven and eight, this group having kept the banner for the entire term. Mrs. Mucklow announced that a May party will take place in May.

BENSALEM GIRLS WIN AT LANGHORNE IN INITIAL GAME

Rally After Being Blanked For Four of The Frames

FINAL SCORE IS 4 TO 3

Thelma Vandegrift Allows Only Three Bingles During The Game

LANGHORNE, Apr. 18.—After being blanked for four frames, coach Helen Smith's 1940 edition of the Bensalem Owl diamond combination rallied in the late innings to overcome an early Langhorne lead and thereby defeat the Squaws in the opening league tilt of the new season for both clubs here yesterday afternoon. The final count was 4-3.

With pitcher Reed of the home team, behind good defensive support, settling the invading sticklers down without much difficulty through the first four sessions, the Squaws appeared well on their way to their initial triumph of the 1940 season. But then Reed weakened and the Owlets reached for most of their hits, which coupled with a few passes and infield outs, the Blue and Grey clad lassies turned apparent defeat into victory.

Thelma Vandegrift, who served them up for coach Smith's club, allowed but three measly bingles and issued not a single base on balls.

"LIBERTY AND WHAT IT MEANT TO THE FOUNDERS OF PENNA."

By Charles Peet Religious liberty was the main reason for the settlement of this state. It was intended as a haven for the Quakers and any other denominational sect who wished to reside here.

To most of the English founders it meant the realization of a long dream of liberty from the Church of England. The Church of England was so strict that it punished anyone who had the courage to disagree with any of its beliefs.

Penn distributed papers and circulars throughout many countries telling of the liberal government and good farms to be found in Pennsylvania. The Scotch-Irish, Welsh, Germans, and many others were fascinated by the opportunities offered here and also because recent wars had left desolation in its wake, many settlers came over from these countries to Pennsylvania.

To these people a liberal government meant liberty from the oppressive laws and taxes imposed upon them by tyrannical rule. The thought of owning a large farm was a great inspiration for them, as it represented their rising up from almost serfdom, and having an abundance of food always on hand. They also considered

Pennsylvania a place where war would not turn everything into destruction, as the Quakers had made friends with the Indians and were known to have expressed themselves against war and refused to take active participation in it.

Penn's idea of government was that the people should share in it but he should also retain certain powers for himself. This government appealed to these people who had been oppressed before. However in spite of numerous liberties granted them in Penn's first Constitution they complained that he had reserved for himself too many powers. They felt he might use these powers to make unjust laws such as they had experienced before. This led to the second Constitution in which even more rights were placed in the hands of the legislature. Most of Penn's ideas still remain as the foundation of our state government.

On the whole most of the people who came over to Pennsylvania were seeking farms, a refuge from unjust taxes, war, and the oppressive rule of heads of governments. We can truly say that they received these blessings bountifully. Pennsylvania to them meant their life, their homes, and their fortunes. The liberty so well earned by our forefathers is something of which we can well be proud.
